EXTRACT: 2.a. Despite the fact that he is at last being raised to a rank equaling GEHLEN's (Ministerial Direktor), SCHRUEBBER enjoys neither the personal nor the professional prestige of GEHLEN and hence takes inevitably a back seat, both in government circles and in the public view. Likewise he has underestimated the strength of his own position vis-a-vis the Ministry. They could ill afford to fire him for trying to improve his agency, and they could just as ill afford to have him resign after the record of the previous president, especially given his ability to state publicly the reasons for his resignation. 1. It is unfortunate that SCHRUEBBER was failed to weld his men into a team. Had he created the impression that he was doing his utmost to find a satisfactory solution to the personnel situation he could have done this, but he operates at too great a distance from his men.
